Second, psychology provides a comprehensive analysis of the situations in which altruism (and other motives) will and will not lead to helping behaviour. Third, psychology has identified a number of factors that, left unchecked, undermine effective altruism. Finally, psychology allows identification of a theoretically and empirically informed agenda for promoting a truly caring society.

A second scenario is seen when the surviving parent dies. The bereaved, dependent person is admitted to emergency care but never returns home. At one stroke, he or she has lost parent and confidante, home and possessions, a familiar neighbourhood and routines, and perhaps a pet. Searching for the lost parent and home is difficult unless one is able to explain one's needs and unless a new ...

Image via Naazzom Azevedo from Stocksnap.io. The notion of parenting a toddler can frighten even the most tough-minded among us. This probably isn't helped by terms such as 'terrible two's,' and jokes like "Having a two-year-old is kind of like having a blender, but you don't have a top for it" (Jerry Seinfeld, goodreads.com). Sure, toddlers and preschoolers get a bad rap; but ...

Thus advertising directed at children—as opposed to advertising of products for children directed at adults—constitutes a form of objectionable exploitation. Other populations who may be similarly vulnerable are the senile, the ignorant, and the bereaved. Ethics may require not a total ban on marketing to them but special care in how they are marketed to (Brenkert 2008).
