Journey's End is one of the best war films I have ever seen. Absolutely incredible performances (a special nod to Mr. Paul Bettany for bringing a marvelous warmth to the character of Uncle), a haunting score, and most importantly a level of realism and gritty detail that puts many other war films to shame. I've seen this film thrice now, and each time I find something new, and am always at the ...

4.5/5 A somewhat mystery novel where you journey together with the MC as he slowly uncovers his past and rediscovers his lost love and... his back story. The novel mainly focuses on the journey rather than the romance imo. It got a little draggy for me around halfway through, but I could tell the author was trying to build on something so I pressed on and didn't regret it. I really really love ...
